Celebration

I was once told that singling someone out for particular praise or attention is fraught with danger, because others will feel marginalised and, possibly, embittered. I choose to ignore this advice. I think people, on the whole, are reasonable, generous and caring.

So, with some delight, I put the great Mr Cable in the spotlight. He has always been brilliant – sorting small problems and big issues with the School’s IT system and service. His operational know-how and strategic instincts are wonderful.

Remote schooling presents many challenges for us all: students, staff and parents. By definition, remote schooling requires IT expertise and solutions. Mr Cable has done a superb job, making sure that our grand plans could be realised.

He has provided swift, clear and comprehensive technical advice to a host of teachers, to ensure that they could deliver the lessons that they wanted. He has ensured that remote meetings can take place, allowing School staff to stay in touch. He has been integral to our ability to conduct remote interviews, so we are ready, with a full complement of staff in September. And he has done this with his trademark efficiency, humour and grace. How fortunate we are to have him with us at CCHS.

On behalf of us all, I offer ‘thanks’ and ‘congratulations’ to our Mr Cable – we celebrate you.
